Berea College Collegiate dept. Senior class
Chimes.

Charter of Berea College

We, the Senior Class of nineteen hundred and forty one, resolve to leave a record of our last year as students of Berea College.

To the Alumni, whom we will soon join, we dedicate this book. And to all the Senior classes who will follow us ~ we extend this volume for approval.

The Chimes Staff ~

We Dedicate to the Alumni . . .

The

Chimes

1941

—for minds that are in retrospection of the good of the past.

—for hearts that love the Berea of here and now.

—for the faithful ambassadorship in representing Berea in all parts of the world.

—and, for their unchanging interest, support and encouragement in keeping the Berea they love in continual progress.

AND

It is an experience peculiar to the Class of '41: that our dean close this chapter of his life and take leave of Berea along with us.

His years of service: We do not choose to extoll all this in his very presence. We dare, rather, (with a term of time-proved respect) to speak out a bit of sentiment: "Dean Tom, we're proud to have been graduated by you."

CREATIVE WRITING

INDIA CULVER

India Culver's wizened face twitched cheek muscles as she sucked at the pipe in her mouth. Presently she knocked the ashes from the pipe and gently tucked it into her apron pocket. Then she lifted a brown jug, pulled out the cork with her two teeth, and poured the white corn whiskey into a tip cup. Slowly she drank, as her gray, battered eyes gazed into the distance. Soon she would be ninety-five years old. Yet life, instead of going out of her, had concentrated itself in her meager, narrow frame. To her there was no time, except in the way of the seasons, in the growth of her sons and grandsons and great-grandsons. All else was sunrise and sunset, shadow and light, and the consumption of a white liquid.

—Woodrow Quinn

TWENTY WRITERS

Godbey, Crabbe, Bowen, Steinberger, Stamper, Bowling, Weekes, Steinorth, Shumate, Farris, Hulburt, Hammond, Auvil.

MUTED WORDS

I can write . . . anyone can write . . . there are things unbounded to be said, that must be said before the world is dead, and tongues are stopped with its dying. I must speak now while the flavor of days is sharp yet to the taste, the hurt of days quick yet to the heart. For to halt but for one moment the evanescence of those days with apt word is to hold enmeshed forever the train of memory.

The silent slant of silvered rain is never gone from me . . . nor burn of autumn flaming on low hills . . . The pent-up cry of violin strangled into ordered tone is held within me free . . . A quickened step upon a frosty walk and lips that breed desire . . . Promises that are as wind that shakes the tree and sets the leaves to singing, then goes away . . . Friends held enchanted in dreams while logs burn low and snap in two and sparks mount toward a silent sky . . . The half-forgotten freedom of a time when drone of airplane was a symbol of achievement and not a harbinger of death . . . The sear of too hot coffee with fresh kolacky . . . And Spring come back too soon.

I will take words . . . everyone has words . . . there are sure knowings, lovely moments transient, that will distill in worlds like scent and linger long when surety is gone. With worlds alone I build against the storm battlements of truth, turrets of freedom.

And I am not alone. My cry is the cry of all who want to translate into a tangibility something of the feeling pregnant in this living. To take the tinted thread of days and weave it into substance to be felt and known and understood; something of strength against the terror of living with hate and fear; something of courage against the death of hope.

But the cry is not heeded, the desire is not made manifest. Feeling comes too haltingly with words and is changed with the uttering. Doubts misplace old confidences. Mistrust of self makes of that self a coward. The shining words, subservient to fear, go darkling and there is no light.

—Ruth Pennington

CANDLE

Not knowing what to say, we sit in silence
Waiting while a stub of candle burns its length
I watch the little tallow drops glisten like tears
Above the curling edge around the flame
And then, overflowing,
Slide down the smoothness of the candle.
Dimmed and colorless, they harden there.
I am afraid to look at you.

The wick floats in a rosy pool of drops
Within the metal base;
A shadow of the flame quivers on the ceiling;
And it is time for you to go.

I stand alone with eyes closed, hoping
The flame will die.

How dark, how very dark it is. . .

—Margaret Steinorth

EXPECTANCY

Just a lonely brook, rustling over smothered stones.
But when I bathed in its coolness,
it became tender, personal,
no longer icily remote.
I raised my soul into a beam of sun that drifted through the pines into the water, and I was Nausicaa.
My nymphs, the elfin trees, protected
me from all reality.
Transformation!
The darting stream was a shallow undertow
of some ancient Grecian water.
Let come Ulysses!

—Meriel Goble

SATURDAY NIGHT

With a loud crash of orchestral music the movie ended. The lights in the chapel came on suddenly and Esther, clutching my sweaty hand, led the way, pushing against the Saturday night crowd.

"Wasn't it wonderful?" sighed pretty girls, dreamy-eyed and clinging to the stout muscular arms of their escorts. Junior-Hi boys repeated "Wasn't it wonderful?" in high-pitched, jeering voices. Molly, pushing a damp, fancy-worked handkerchief under the gold rim of her glasses, put her arm about her plumpish roommate sumpathetically, and they sobbed, "Wasn't it wonderful?"

Finally the digging elbows relaxed and the crowd spread at the door. We followed along silently, listening to the reactions of the people. In front of Lincoln Hall three girls passed us. They were talking in slow dramatic tempo, their faces averted, their feet barely touching the ground. In each I saw the heroine, Bett, majestic, alluring, living a reckless life. One of them stopped prancing when she saw me watching her and guiltily hurried on.

Twice along the way I saw the final movie kiss repeated in all its sincerity, sweetness, and dramatic possibilities.

We were near Curtis House when Esther first spoke. "You know, my life is almost like hers." She said it dreamily, with her hands posed just so and her face tilted to catch the street light.

"I know, Esther—mine too," I whispered.

YARD CLEANING

You, there, in your solid brick house—
How can you know what autumn is?
Over your stiff clipped hedges the musty leaf smell will not seep—
You are color-blind to this world gone mad with twisting shafts of light.

In you stiff clipped hedged-in lives,
Autumn is the time of yard cleaning.

—Ermon Fay Johnson

DEPARTURE

A silence brief with human inability
To bear its preponderant suffocation
Of emotions tearing at tightened throats
Like rasped filings of metal breath
Grating scarlet inner linings of soft flesh;
Broke finally with the too great pain of its own tension
As they began quietly to set in motion
Preparations necessary to his last going Home.

—Walter Clarke

I'M GOIN' TO TAKE A HOLIDAY

Gong . . . Gong . . . Gong . . . there she goes . . . Lord, let the show go off well. This is the last night and there's no telling what will happen . . . Alda and the Duke are on . . .

"The houselights are on. Tell Jack to kill 'em quick."

The actors must be scared silly, but they hide it well . . . They're doing beautifully . . . Don't giggle, you morons, this is drama . . . Calm down, Gabbard, after all you're not out there. That's what's wrong. If I were on the stage, I wouldn't be so nervous . . .

What if Kat Wilson's putty nose should pop off? . . . Don't think about such things, you dope, after all, it's glued on . . . Maybe the ceiling piece will collapse . . . Oh Lord, what would happen . . . Someone might get killed, but worst of all, it would spoil the show . . . What's a life more or less when a performance is at stake . . . Those people from out of town would like that, wouldn't they? How they would like to pick our show to pieces! Shut up, you're being childish . . .

Will this act never end? Death and Duke are through their scene . . . That silvered glove shivers the audience . . . Ah, the introductions are over, the curtain closes . . .

"Tony, make 'em keep quiet everybody. Joe, get off the stage. We don't want to sound like a bunch of amateurs."

"Okay. Keep quiet everybody. To your dressing rooms."

"What's the matter over there?"

"Corky has left her slip at home and is running around like a nut."

"Has Juanita gone after one?"

"Yeah, let's hope she makes it. Corky doesn't come on at first, thank the good Lord."
I know I can't live through the rest of this . . . Why did I go in for dramatics, anyhow? . . . I could have picked Agriculture or Chemistry or anything . . . But no, I draw dramatics . . .

Could the second act have begun? . . .

"Where's the Baron?"

"You mean he's missed his cue?"

"Yes. Frances and Hal are out there ad libbing. There goes Hal off stage to get him. He's on, he's on! Those kids covered up beautifully."

Corleene's made it. Whew, what a relief!

Oh, oh, it's Alda's and Death's love scene . . . Someone is bound to giggle or make a kissing sound . . . They're kissing . . . Not a sound from the audience . . . Those wonderful Junior High kids, I love 'em all, at least those out there . . .

"My dress has ripped open. Where's Ralph?"

"Here. What happened, Alda?"

"I don't know. But get me sewn up quick."

This is a fine time for her dress to burst a seam. I hope the audience doesn't think we're doing a strip tease. Not in Berea, anyway . . . At last, the curtain . . .

"Places, everybody."

Ah, just fifteen minutes to go and we're through . . . I dread this black out . . . The audience will applaud and get up and leave if we don't hurry it . . . What's keeping Bill so long? Why doesn't he give the signal. Ah, we made it . . . Now I get to shine. I'll probably knock the chimes off the wall with the first stroke . . .

"Then (bong) there is a love (bong) that casts out (bong) fear and I have (bong) found it (bong)." Bong . . . Blackout . . . Bong . . . Curtain . . . Bong . . .

Does anyone mind if I go to a quiet corner and collapse?

SHALL

We,
with hearts
and minds assailed
and bogged down by worldly sentiment,

travel through days of deepening stress to the strains of bugles playing;
bent

on leading us,
despite our views,
to battle fields thick strewn with finished men?
or

WILL

We,
with hearts
and minds so clear
that only our own wills shall dominate,

live our lives with confidence and faith in what we think is but connate

in the world
of love and truth.
And with that faith inside us TRAVEL ON?

CONCERNING THE SUPERIORITY OF MAN . . . .

I am not a stone. If I were, I could not contemplate my fellow stones and write these words upon a silent sheet of paper. If I were a stone, I might rest quietly upon a high pinnacle, warm with the warmth of the sun, and cool with the coolness of shadows. With no power to awaken, and no power to sleep, I would be unaware of day and night, of wind and rain, of the touch of bird and insect. If the pinnacle were my home, I could not move except at the insistence of the changing earth or a mountain-climbing foot or hand.

I am not a stone. If I were, I might lie wetly in the bed of a stream, or rest firmly in a man-made wall, a path or a road. I might be red or gray or white, but I would not know. And I would not know. And I would be as empty of concern for my companion stones as they for me.

I am not a stone. I am a man. I claim the stone as mine to use, and I build a temple. I take the stone as mine, and with my skillful hands I fashion from it a weapon with which to slay my enemy.

If I were a tree, I would claim the earth with my roots and the sky with my branches, and change with the changing season. Lifting myself to the sun, bending away from the storms, my body would clothe itself with blossoms and spend itself with seed. I cannot clearly say just how much I would know of birds and bees, if I were a tree. But this I know: that man deems it his right to take the fibrous trunk, and fashion from the body of a tree his shelter from the sun and cold, his chair, his table and his bed.

I am not a tree. I am a man, and I may use a single tree to make a cradle for my child, or a cross for my enemy.

I am not a sheep. If I were I would wander, within confining fences, over the stones and beneath the trees. My small hard hoofs would beat narrow paths between one pasture and another, and I would spend my days searching out my favorite grass and weed. There would be a flock of sheep I would have no concern for any lamb but mine. Without mercy or thought of mercy, without courage or lack of courage, I would push intruding lambs away.

I am not a sheep. I am a man. I direct the lives of sheep and use their wool as I will. With color which the earth has yielded to me, I dye the wool. I weave blankets for my bed, rugs for my floor, and garments for myself and my fellow men. I am a man and I consider it my right to use the tools which I have made to kill the sheep which I have raised. I hang the lifeless body, head down, and skillfully separate the skin from the flesh. I build a hearth of stone and a fire of wood. I cook the flesh of animals and eat it from dishes made of clay. I go from the warmth of my hearth with energy to build, with energy to destroy.

I am a man. My hands are triumphantly capable of doing my will. My mind is restlessly alert. My heart is strangely sensitive. I am not a sheep. I am not a tree. I am not a stone.

BLACK AND WHITE

Negroes were rare in Cat Town. In fact, I had seen only one, and she was an aged ex-slave. So when the Whitakers moved into the house across the road I was so excitedly curious that I could hardly eat. Dad scolded me for staring, so I rushed to the pear tree, there to peer through masses of bloom and watch every move made by the six little black strangers. Desperately I longed to play with them, but I didn't dare suggest such a thing to Mother.

When we saw a white child with the black, Mother was immediately convinced that she had been kidnapped and that the Whitakers had come to our isolated community to hide. Dad insisted that, although she showed no traces of Negro blood, the child was really a blond Negro. My fascination was intensified by fear, for Mother might be right, and if she were, they might want another little white girl..

For two weeks I spent most of my waking hours in the pear tree, staring until my eyes ached. The blooms fell, the leaves were too small to screen me, but I stared on. I knew every one of the children by name, and every note of their hilarious laughter. Eagerly I waited for the rich, low songs of the mother and the deep chuckle of the father. I noted that they often had only one meal a day and that the children were sent out to borrow food for that. Especially was I aware of the gentleness which they all showed to the tiny golden-haired girl, who was always silent, never crying as other two-year-olds do.

Reluctantly I went to Sunday School one morning. When I got back to the pear tree I could see no one. A thin feather of smoke drifted from the chimney. Surely the Whitakers were not eating dinner, not this early in the morning. But the rickety old wagon was not soaking in the pond, and no flea-bitten mules pulled at the sassafras bushes in the yard. Desolation clutched at my throat as I tore through the briars and over fences to where my father was salting cattle on the hill. Dad shouted, "Don't run like that. You'll scare the horses." I stopped short, then, elaborately casual, rubbed the big chestnut and fed an apple to the colt.

As my father and I strolled back to the barn, hand in hand, he remarked, "Well, the niggers left this morning. I don't suppose they stole anything on the way out. I hope they don't come around here any more."

Back in the pear tree, I stared for a long time at the faint path through new grass. That was the only trace of the Whitaker's residence—that, and the loneliness in the heart of a child who had watched from afar.

TAPESTRY AND HOMESPUN

To you, whose eyes are proud and brave,

Who ask no gift, and take no staff
To march with you to any height,
Whose shining armor is your laugh;

I offer you one star-small gift

Because you helped me stand, and know
That I am but a tapestry,
When life, pure life, should only glow
In homespun, woven humility—

I give an endless thread, my love.

EPITOME

Rain, come fall on me now. Late or soon, drizzle or downpour, choose your own fiendish way. This cold steel hull that once was heart is scuttled now, for the centuries that are yours have seared all sense of pain. The night just passed was filled with fears that I might die before I had even lived. But at gray break of the morning you won.

This heart that so few hours ago pumped young red blood is sterile now. Vengeance? Why, I'd laugh with you, heinous murderer. First, though, let me remember yesterday's hopes—just this one time? (Were you human, the torture might satiate your hellish desire to rape young life.)

I am glad now that I was a youth. You see, youth's puerile vision discounted the pessimistic aphorisms that senile elders spoke. Youth said, "This world is mine for the taking."
So last night I left my theoried books for a spell. Wrapped in the rubber-smelled old slicker, I walked in the downpour.
Nothing new, I'd done it since I was a tad. The rain in my face, warmed by the time it reached my throat, leaked through to lose itself on the tingling skin of a healthy body.

Before vibrant heart had sung one note, mind came bustling along, panting to keep up. Fertile mind labored to rein in, with its everlasting reason, a wild heart that loved life. Rational mind would have no compromise, and heart, never servile, cracked under the rain of eternal force.

Rain, when the Himalayas are washed down level, spread your lurking grin, APE! But when you recall this proud heart, deadened to love, remember also the reluctance with which you released your soggy hands.

COMPETITION

You, Egon Petri—you walk across the stage below me and bow with confidence before your audience. I am just the Chimes in the tower above you, but I challenge you. Do not be so sure, do not be so serene. You give your coat-tails a deft flip and sit quickly at your piano. You are a master and you would conquer this audience as you have conquered the piano with the technique of your tutored fingers. But I defy you. Listen to my voice.

One, two. . .

You do not heed me as I chime the hour. The strength of your fingers runs down across the keys and stills the restlessness of the crowded room. Bach, Mozart, Schumann, Liszt. . . held poised by the power that is yours, the power of those white hands. Eager is your audience and grateful but I only laugh at the waves of your tone that mount up to me and my laughter is in my chime which you ignore.

Three, four. . .

Your enchantment will not last for long. You are just a little man with agile fingers. You will be gone tomorrow and this audience will forget you. Tomorrow they will follow me as I direct them to their time appointed duties. They are servants to me even if now they listen to you and do not heed the time.

Five, six. . .

Play on, Egon Petri, play on. In the end I will win. Your music will be stilled and hours will again be mine. Finish your program, play encores for the applause rightly yours. Ignore the hour that I am chiming. It is not for long.

Seven, eight. . .

—Ruth Pennington

NOTHING

What is nothing? The dictionary says that it is not anything; that which does not exist. That much can be seen from the word itself: no-thing. But then, what is a thing? Again turning to the dictionary, we are told that it is whatever exists, or is conceived to exist, as a separate entity, or as a distinct and individual quality, fact, or idea; any separable or distinguishable object of thought; anything at all. Boiling down all this high-brow languauge, we find that a thing is anything that is.

Fine. Now we have something to work on. But what? Even Webster was driven in desperation to using a compound of the word itself to describe thing. It's so indefinite; anything can be a thing, except nothing. So we are right back where we started.

First, can you describe an absence, which is the best synonym I can think of. You can say "There is nothing here," but how can you declare the presence of that which does not exist, an abstract? You are telling a lie, because you are using a word to express something that does not exist and—but there, I said something does not exist when if it is a thing it must exist. There seems to be no way to express it (it what, when nothing is definitely not any kind of an it); so let's leave that branch of the question for a while.

Let's try to find an illustration of nothing. Hold out your hand. Now close it with a firm, sure grip. If you have done this properly, you should have an excellent sample of nothing in your tightly clenched fist. Open your hand slowly, and look at your sample. Sure there's air there, but you can't see air and so we'll just disregard it for this simple experiment. What do you see between the palm of your hand and your eyes? Look carefully—is it—yes! Nothing!

But now let's think it over more carefully. Take a few more aspirins, and let's go:

You saw nothing. That's just fine; except one thing: How can you see nothing when nothing is the lack of anything to feel, see, smell, or touch? Of course, you couldn't see anything, and so you suppose there was nothing there. But can you prove it? Yes, because if there isn't anything there there must be nothing there. We said a long time ago that nothing is nothing more or less than the lack of something. Let's not go into how it got there, or where it came from unless we want some nice kind men in clean white uniforms to take us to a lovely place where we won't harm ourselves or anyone else—

So we have nothing. It isn't so hard to get, after all. But (here we go again), if we have it (that's good: using it to refer to nothing) it must exist. There we are, all snarled up again. We can't possess nothing unless it exists, if it exists it isn't nothing, and if it isn't nothing (double negative; remember your English teacher?) it is something.

So something is not nothing. At last we have something to work on. (don't look now, but we had that in the first two paragraphs of this crazy essay.) Maybe now we can get something done. Wait a minute: We are trying to get something done about nothing. We are working hard for nothing, and—Isn't this where I came in?

—Ned Stoddard

WHAT CAN I WRITE?

What can I write on a sheet of paper?

Airplanes write fear
On blue skies;
Bombs leave a signature of ugliness
On ancient buildings;
On dewy fields.

What can I write?
Who will look at my paper?
Must all writing be ugly?
Must it dig into things and people
With sharp points?

Once men saw a message
On midnight blue,
Five-pointed and shining,
But blood-shot eyes
Are too inflamed
To look toward it,
And teary eyes are to myopic
To trace its outline.

Once such eyes were opened
To stark characters
Against a black cloud:
Three rough stakes
With wooden cross-pieces,
Rising from the hill-top
And over one a light
Beyond all understanding.
There was a writing
At man's eye level.

Can I learn to write on blackness
With a steady hand?

DRAFTED

Small white card—innocent—poison.
Leveler of plans—rearranger of life.

A home—an army camp.
Soft quick steps on a rug, rustle of thin silk—
Thump of nails on board, rasp of stiff khaki.
Intimacy of soft nights, quick warm breaths on a pillow—
Hard army cots, snore of exhaustion.
Savorous meats and salads—heavy beans, greasy stews,
Comfort of house shoes—cold boards under blistered feet.
Ripple of woman's laughter—bursting of shells.
Crying of new life—whining of bullets.
Baby fingers pressed into a warm breast—
Numb stiff fingers on a gun stock.
Desires of youth filled—age, with desires twisted.
Two souls living—one soul dead.

Innocent white card, rearranger of life.

LETTER FROM HOME

A letter came from home today, leaving me feeling a sickly pea-green. Three words did it. Those jagged scratchings from Mother's pen dug in, penetrating me as that hoary frost did the hills and valleys early this morning. It is silly that they should mean so much, but they do. These are the words: "We moved today."

Imagine that! My family moved from our home! My home! After living sixteen years in a house that lived and breathed "home," that molded itself to our needs, that always called us to come back, now it's all over. The calamity of it! The death of home!

Where am I going for Christmas vacation? Must I visit the family in their strange, new possession? I want to go home!—home to that old, ten room brick house down in the heart of town. I don't want to go to their duplex up there in—Heights, where all the rich people are supposed to live. We aren't one of them. It'll be a strain rather than a relaxation to go there.

I can almost see myself traipsing down a foreign street in the snow, lugging a battered old suitcase in one freezing hand, fingering a piece of paper in the other. The paper has on it my new address. I wonder what the new home will look like? This foster child thrust upon me. Is it big enough to keep our furniture on friendly terms with each other? What about our stuff, our junk, that was stored on the third floor back home? I bet any money that the sentimental souvenirs that I've saved for years were torn open. I hope they saw the sentimentality rather than the silliness in them—and kept them for me. The letter says, "Be prepared to part with many of your belongings when you come home for Christmas."

I'd like to sneak back to my old home, naked as it will be,—or rudely intruded upon by strangers—just to linger a tiny bit, and then go to the new house. I'll adapt myself to it as I would a step-mother or step-father, or as I would to any new possession, but it will be hard, and I am stubborn.

—Miriam Louise Evans

I rolled out of bed hating for a second the bright sunshine which streaked the dusty floor. Why couldn't it be dark just a little longer?

After quietly making up my bed, I gathered my utensils to make my morning journey to the bathroom. Returning I found my roommate had finally managed to brave the morning. We dressed in silence, one moving over grudgingly at the dresser while both applied the essentials of facial beauty.

I don't have a first period class so I retired to my desk to study some much needed history. My roommate hunted frantically for her jacket and books. Rushing out the door as the bell rings she flings me a smile and my morning greeting, "See you at chapel."

HOW TO STUDY

There's really an art to studying, and when you discover it, your grades are made. Now, everyone has his own personal technique and it is up to every individual to discover his own method of study. The following is one technique that has been highly developed by college students and I offer it to you for what it is worth. It is recommended particularly for Junior and Senior girls.

The night before an important quiz, come home immediately after supper. Bring the gang into your room and ask them to stay for coffee. When they insist on leaving at 7:30 make another pot of coffee and they'll stay another half-hour at least. After they leave you can write a letter home and another one to your best boy friend (you've already written him one that day in Philosophy class). Clean your room next and be sure to shake the rugs on the fire escape. This takes lots of time. After that, shampoo your hair and manicure your nails, iron clothes that have been sprinkled and re-sprinkled, if it is linen night insist that it is your time to get the clean linen, read a magazine—one that has a book-length novel—and make your roommates' bed.

If this isn't enough you can still paste pictures in your photograph album, read old letters, take an inventory of your wardrobe and knit on a sweater.

By this time it should be 11 o'clock. You may now take your book off the shelf—dust it—and get in bed. But you're so tired and sleepy—just set the alarm for five o'clock. Turn off the light and then . . . . . Peace.
Do this before every quiz and you will make your grades—what kind of grades? That's your worry—not mine!

—Katharine Sutherland

Life is mine—to do with as I will!
And I may take it from the depths of sober mediocrity
And sling it to the heights of storm swept peaks
Amid the clouds and lightning and the sunshine
Of Love and Laughter—
And there—when sunset comes—abandon it!
For Life is mine!

—Ann de Jarnette

This thing that has been done to me
For which once I would have severed
That gossamer strand between
Being and nothing
I now provoke.

Life is too exciting to relinquish
I long to spread myself as a film over the Universe
To grasp every sensuous contact:
to starve
to freeze
to catch divine laughter in the wind stride
And swagger with callous smile under street lamps
Wresting substance from mire.

Living is beyond suffering,
I must hurl myself in Universe
Before I become of earth—
Before I melt into sun.

PENSARE

I slid down the haystack, absently chewing a blade of grass. Then I climbed back up and just sat there. Below the crest of the next hill, my father and old Henry, who lived in the tenant house, were swinging scythes in a sort of dramatic rhythm. I knew, without looking at them, that they were breathing heavily, their shirts plastered to their backs with sweat. Behind me a hen cackled, the sound scattering into smaller fragments of sound, and falling back into the noisy quietness of country life. There was pattern here, a harmonious pattern of hens and bees and steamy horses and brown-footed children. Not that I was aware of these things. At eight, I didn't deal in realities of later importance. I realized only that my father knew everything in the world, that Judy, who wasn't quite six, was a mere baby, and that one went over gates, not through them.

By the time I was fifteen I was far too sophisticated to slide down haystacks or even sit on them. But there was one less public than the others, on a sheltered southern slope from which I could look at and through Elk Knob. By this time I knew all the answers. My father had grown hopelessly old-fashioned, and Judy, at twelve and a half, was still afflicted with extreme youth. A certain boy named Billy Thomas had beautiful brown eyes.

Last summer it wasn't sentiment that made me go back to the old haystack. It was a deliberate experiment. When I was sure to the point of desperate finality that nobody knows anything, that the old order never was and that there is no order about the new . . . I climbed to the top of the haystack and sat there waiting for things to happen. At first nothing did. Then when I had forgotten why I had come, absorbed in the dark and light design made by one tall milkweed shadow, that feeling came back with all the concreteness of which a mere feeling is capable. I knew then that all was right with the world and that security can be entered into and left like a state of mind.

There is something about haystacks.

SPENDTHRIFT

I was not quite certain what I wanted,
I said to the shopkeeper (Her name was Fate,
I learned later)
And if I might just look - - -
Certainly, she assured me, and maybe she could help me.
Now here's a nice life—she spread it full-length before me
And, I examining its brown-warm pattern of complacent existence
(Suspicious of hearth and home-fire)
Agreed with her that it was nice.
Secure in the knowledge that I should never possess it.

Then we have others . . . her voice was pale honey—
This, maybe. . .
I caught my breath at its beauty,
And my fingers were feverish for it.
The shortest bit of life it was—a mere scrap—
But clear to the edge its colors were Passion and poverty
Loveliness and loneliness
Wildness and wise-men's scorn.
That—I'll take that one, my voice crashed hoarse through her sales-talk;
Impatient I waited while paper and strings went around it
Then stood with my package, stricken - - -

I had not asked of her what price I should pay.

The purpose of the Vanguards is to investigate, discuss, and stimulate interest in social and economic problems. Investigation yields knowledge and knowledge is a prerequisite of understanding. Furthermore, wise judgments and actions are possible only when the problems and issues are understood. And in as much as discussion clarifies issues and reveals the nature of problems being investigated, the importance of its role in the effort to understand problems is hard to exaggerate.

VANGUARDS

In the spring of 1939, the Public Affairs Forum was organized for the purpose of promoting better understanding of public affairs through study, discussion, lectures, and pictures. During the two years of its existence it has become a vital organization on the campus. Membership this year exceeds 100.

The most important project of the Forum is the Laboratory, a library of contemporary propaganda, which contains material from over 400 organizations in the United States and foreign countries.

BEREA PLAYERS

GLENDON GABBARD, Pres. FLORENCE SEAY, Treas.

PEARL PHILLPOTT, Secy. DAYTON HULBURT, V. Pres.

The Dramatic Club, reorganized under the name The Berea Players, has begun a far-reaching program which has brought many changes in internal organization and broader contacts with outlying organizations. Membership has reached a new peak of 233 members drawn from the Lower and Upper divisions.

The Club now has three honoray organizations whose membership is determined by points given upon the basis of work done: These are:

Alpha Psi Omega—750 points in acting and stagecraft must be earned for membership.

Tau Delta Tau—requires 750 points in stagecraft alone.

Thespians—open to Academy, requires 200 points in acting and stagecraft, or in acting alone, or stagecraft alone.

Death Takes a Holiday by Alberto Casella was the fall presentation under the direction of Katherine Stith. The set was designed by Glendon Gabbard. His account of the stagecraft problems in producing the play was published in The High School Thespian for March, 1941.

Three-cornered Moon by Gertrude Tonkonogy, the major spring production, was directed by Frances Snodgrass. Marriage Proposal by Anton Chekhov, under the direction of Esther Warner, was entered in the Kentucky Drama Festival for high schools and received a superior rating. Adeline Tinder received a rating of excellent for her characterization of Natalia Stepanovana in the play.

A total of 31 one-act plays have been presented before the Club. These productions have been carefully criticized by competent reviewers to help maintain a high standard for all work.

The Club wishes to express its appreciation for the leadership and enthusiastic direction of Dr. Earl W. Blank and Dr. Harry B. Gough.

FOLK CLUB

The Folk Club has been unusually active this year under the very capable leadership of the president, B. P. Allen. An opportunity to learn new folk dances and enjoy old ones has been offered and much interest has been shown by the regular attendance of old members and a continual increase of new ones.

On February first the entire club participated in a demonstration given between halves of the basketball game at Seabury Gymnasium.

COUNTRY DANCES

The Country Dancers is an informal group, its members being students picked from large folk dance groups throughout the three divisions of the school. The group, under the capable direction of Mr. Frank Smith, learns the more difficult of the country dances. These they dance for various occasions on and off the campus in order to show the beauty and fun that may gained from country dancing.

AG UNION

The Ag. Union is an organization made up of boys who are majoring in agriculture. It is one of the best organizations on the campus, creating a great deal of interest in problems of agriculture. It plans and manages a field day for the F.F.A. of surrounding communities where former members of the Union are now instructors.

AG JUDGING TEAM

BASKETBALL

From the standpoint of games won and lost, the second year of Coach Clark's efforts resulted in the most successful season in several years. In winning six games during the regular season, the Blue and White cagers displayed some of the best ball handling seen in local circles for some time. The Mountaineers presented a high scoring combination which was seldom too far behind to be a threat. Although the prevacation games, which resulted in losses to Georgetown and Transy, gave little indication of anything better than a mediocre season the team swung into action after Christmas with a spirit that was not to be denied. Highly evaluated teams from Wesleyan and Eastern came to town only to be beaten by the rampaging Mountaineers. Then after a disheartening two point loss to Union's Bulldogs, the Blue and White came back to avenge previous losses by disposing of Georgetown and Transylvania. At this point Lady Luck frowned on the Bereans who then lost hard fought battles to Morehead, Eastern, Louisville, and Wesleyan. However, the Clark men ended the regular season in the right column by defeating Centre in the last home game of the season.

When Berea drew into the same bracket as Western for the K.I.A.C. tournament at Eastern, all chances for success were negligible. The boys survived the first round by again defeating Transy 40-35, but bowed out to a superior Western team by a score of 53-33 on the following night.

Five men will be lost from this year's team by graduation: "Big" Joe Greene, leading point scorer and member of the 1941 all K.I.A.C. tournament team; Charley Hale, varsity guard for three seasons and captain of the team; Wilbur Harper, lanky forward; Chad Mullins of the never-say-die spirit; and the spunkiest of all—little Og Stewart.

The remaining members of the squad, Bays, Moore, Bailey, Adams and Bess, coupled with the members of a promising frosh team should give Berea a well balanced quint for the coming season.

TRACK

Since 1932, Berea's cinder men have virtually monopolized the track championship of the K.I.A.C. In these eight years, the track-men have garnered six state championship trophies, having lost in '36 to Centre's Colonels and to the Hilltopper's of Western in '39.

The ranks of the Champion Mountaineers of 1940 were badly riddled by graduation. The loss of co-captains Powell and Caudill, along with Tully, Davis, Nickell, and Felton will be keenly felt, for these men composed the nucleus of one of the strongest teams ever to appear on the cinders, and compiled the enviable of going through the 1940 season without losing a meet.

Prospects for the coming season are not so bright as last year, and rumblings from out of the West indicate some stiff competition from the lads from Bowling Green. Although it is too early in the season to make any prediction of the outcome of the track wars, hopes are high for another Trophy for the Mountaineer runners. Seniors, who are participating in their last year of intercollegiate competition, are Cromer, Howsmon, Walters, Mullins.

TENNIS

For the first time in the history of the school the tennis team can boast its own coach who does not have to divide his time with another team. Wilson Evans, the Alumni Secretary, has agreed to take over the coaching duties, and his net experience should aid the team. From the fourteen men who answered his first call for practice at the gym, Coach Evans will choose the men who will represent Berea against such competition as Tennessee, Kentucky, and Cincinnati. Last year's racqueteers were not victorious in any of their eight matches, but the Bereans of this year will be more experienced and well coached and should compile a good record. Lettermen returning from last year's team are Capt. Marvin Jones, Estill Jones H. Walters and Noel Shutt.

SWIMMING

Thanks to the new reservoir, the mermen did not have to fight a losing battle against a diminishing water supply this year, and lost little time getting under way. U.K.'s dry land team came to town and defeated our boys 45-29. Then on an extended trip, the Bereans lost to V.P.I. 65-10 and to Concord College 59-19. The Blue and White swimmers then proceeded to shellac Morehead twice 48-28 and 46-29. Their season's record consisted of two wins and three losses. Representing Berea for the last time in intercollegiate competition were David Headley and Walter Clarke.

CROSS COUNTRY

Because of difficulty in scheduling meets for this gueling run, the Berea Harriers participated in only one meet this year. After a long period of intensive training the team entered the Shamrock Athletic Club's Turkey Day race at Louisville. The Mountaineers kept up the tradition of the distance runners of Berea by taking second place behind the team from Butler University. The showing in this meet won letters for Rex Wesley, Coldiron, Adams, Scherrer and Fred Wesley.

INTRAMURAL SPORTS

Intramural sports took a new turn this year. With the help of the Intramural Council, Coach Gunkler initiated a new program. A record is to be kept of the showings of the various teams throughout the year and small "B's" will be given to that team which has the smallest number of points at the end of the year. This promises to be a very satisfactory program and is thought to cause a great deal more interest in the intramural sports program.

CLASSROOM COMFORT . . .

Correctly heated classrooms are comfortable, healthful classrooms. That's why Trane Convectors—the ideal combination of convected, radiant and panel heat—are widely used throughout American colleges and universities, just as they are at Berea College. Trane Convectors are a product of the manufacturer of the most complete line of heating, cooling, and air conditioning equipment commercially available.

OPTIMIST'S CREED

As you ramble on thru life, brother,
No matter what your goal,
Keep your eye upon the donut—
And not upon the hole!

And if you're fond of donuts
That fill you full of jollity,
Fresh, delicious, wholesome—
